Dear Judith:

Since your telephone call, Arthur and I have been thinking about the title of the book again and Arthur has decided that he would now like to call the book LONG LIVE LIFE. It is a title which sounds good in all languages and is so appropriate and optimistic - what do you think? We have sounded out many people here and all agree that it is much better than either Happy Years or Happy Life.

Arthur would like the dedication of the book to read as follows:-

> To Annabelle, my devoted friend and companion > with my love and gratitude.

I enclose the answers to your queries which I do hope are clearly written; 4 photographs of the Picasso drawings; as many first names as we have been able to investigate; divisions with part titles; translations for the pages as requested but Arthur is most anxious that the original foreign language should be left in the text so as not to sacrifice the extra colour and that the phrase in question should be accompanied asterisk with the translation at the bottom of the page. Arthur has decided that it would not be a very good idea to reproduce a part of the illustrated journal made by the children during the Australian tour. He feels that it is something which needs to be seen as it is, complete, to be properly appreciated.

Please let us know how you feel about all this. We can be reached here until the end of the month, and then I will let you know our exact addresses and telephone numbers.

With all best wishes from us both,
